Advert sites 58.com and Ganji.com agree to merge

Henny Sender

Share Author alerts Print Clip Comments

New York-listed 58.com and a second Chinese online marketplace have agreed to merge, as consolidation accelerates in the local technology sector.

A memorandum of understanding between 58.com and Ganji.com, which both function much like US site Craigslist, was signed in Beijing on March 14, people familiar with the matter said.

The two groups are expected to announce as soon as Wednesday that they are planning to combine to create what will become one of the largest specialised online classified companies in China's booming mobile internet space. The combined group could be valued at as much as $10bn, one person involved in the transaction said.

Because of antitrust concerns the transaction will probably involve two stages. Currently 58.com, which declined to comment, is about twice as big as Ganji.com, but both companies provide a range of online advertising listings including job adverts, housing and second-hand goods.

Last year, internet giant Tencent bought a 20 per cent stake in 58.com, and the online marketplace announced last month that it had acquired Shanghai-based property-listing platform Anjuke Inc for about $267m in cash and shares.

Haoyong Yang, the founder of Ganji.com, will become one of the co-chief executives along with Jinbo Yao, founder of 58.com, the person said.

By joining forces, the two hope to reduce marketing costs substantially. Each spend about $250m a year on such efforts, one investor said. US-based private equity firms have stakes in both groups, with Warburg Pincus an investor in 58.com while Carlyle, Sequoia and Tiger Global, among others, have stakes in Ganji.

The latest merger comes at a time when investors are very bullish about Chinese internet shares but are also concerned that many of the sector's companies are burning too much cash as they subsidise their operations to attract customers.

"People are fighting over the market," said one leading tech investor. "There is so much money thrown at these companies that they are virtually paying people to use their services. The money is not being used efficiently."

The merger plans come at a time when some western investors in mainland Chinese internet firms are starting to pressure the management to place more focus on shareholder value.

"Many companies make decisions on the basis of ego of their founders, not economics," this investor added. "Even when they only have small stakes in their companies."

In some cases, that has led to merger talks.

Last summer, two of China's leading online taxi services, Kuadi Dache, which is part owned by Alibaba, and Didi Dache, part owned by Alibaba's bitter rival Tencent, ended their price war and agreed to combine.

"It was like Romeo and Juliet getting married with the blessing of both sets of parents," this person added.

The planned listing of Alibaba's financial operations in China this year is expected to give rise to another bout of frenzied activity in the space.

58.com Acquires Strategic Stake In Ganji.com and Announces Additional Investment by Tencent

BEIJING, April 17, 2015 /PRNewswire/ -- 58.com Inc. (NYSE: WUBA) ("58.com" or "the Company") today announced that it has acquired a strategic stake in Falcon View Technology Limited ("Ganji"), the holding company of the PRC entities operating Ganji.com, a major online local services marketplace platform in China. Concurrently, 58.com also announced an approximately US$400 million additional investment by Tencent Holdings Limited ("Tencent"), a leading provider of internet services in China.

Under the terms of the definitive agreement with shareholders of Ganji ("the 58.com-Ganji Strategic Transaction"), and as part of an intended long-term, strategic combination transaction, 58.com has agreed to acquire an approximately 43.2% fully diluted equity stake in Ganji for a combination of share consideration and cash, including approximately 34 million newly issued ordinary shares of the Company (one American Depositary Share, or "ADS", represents two class A ordinary shares) and US$412.2 million in cash. The two companies, which will continue to operate their respective brands, websites and teams, intend to maximize business synergies created by this new strategic relationship, and capitalize on opportunities to cooperate and further expand their businesses.

Founded in Beijing in 2005, Ganji.com has become one of China's leading online local services marketplaces. Every month, hundreds of millions of users come to Ganji.com to access a wide range of location-based services from millions of active merchants, in areas such as jobs, housing, second hand products and local services information.

Concurrent with the 58.com-Ganji Strategic Transaction and incremental to its existing share ownership in 58.com, Tencent has signed a definitive share purchase agreement with 58.com to purchase an additional approximately US$400 million of newly issued ordinary shares from 58.com at a purchase price equivalent to US$52 per ADS (the "Tencent Investment"). Following the completion of this additional investment by Tencent, Tencent will hold in aggregate approximately 25.1% of the total issued and outstanding shares of 58.com on a fully-diluted basis.

Both the 58.com-Ganji Strategic Transaction and the Tencent Investment are expected to close within a few days, subject to customary closing conditions.

Mr. Michael Jinbo Yao, Chairman and CEO of 58.com, commented, "We are pleased to make this large-scale strategic investment in Ganji.com to jointly realize major cost, revenue, and strategic business synergies. This transaction is part of our larger plan to execute our vision of integrating our respective businesses and creating a larger and more effective local services internet platform to help consumers around China find the services that they need in their local area. Ganji.com has done a tremendous job building a talented team, and we look forward to working more closely with them as we continue to expand in this growing and underserved market."

Mr. Mark Haoyong Yang, Chairman and CEO of Ganji.com, added, "After extensive discussions, we are pleased to reach this strategic agreement with 58.com. Both Ganji and 58.com are leading players in the online

Ctrip, Qunar Surge as Deal Lessens China Travel Competition

October 26, 2015 — 9:47 AM EDT
Updated on October 26, 2015 — 8:52 PM EDT

- Companies will have 70-80% market share, Summit Research says
- China has become largest source of tourists in the world

Ctrip.com International Ltd. and Qunar Cayman Islands Ltd. jumped in U.S. trading after the companies agreed to a merger, creating the dominant online travel service in China in a deal that may ease price competition that has crimped profits.

Ctrip rallied 22 percent to a record close of $90.78 in New York on Monday. Qunar advanced 7.9 percent to $42.65, the highest since Aug. 10 on trading volume that was nearly 17 times the three-month average. Goldman Sachs Group Inc. upgraded both companies to buy. A Bloomberg gauge of U.S.-traded Chinese stocks rallied 2.1 percent.

While Chinese trip-booking sites have benefited from a boom in overseas travel, profits have been squeezed as the industry becomes increasingly competitive. Under the terms of a share swap deal announced Monday, Ctrip and Qunar will combine products and services and control 70 percent to 80 percent of the hotel and air ticket markets, Summit Research analyst Henry Guo wrote in a research note Monday.

“After this deal, these two companies will own the majority of the market share in China,” Guo said by phone on Monday. “They can coordinate a strategy in such a way that they can continue to grow market share, but meanwhile profitability and the bottom line should remain in good shape, which meets investors’ expectations and is good for both companies.”

‘Getting Bigger’

Baidu Inc., which controls Qunar, will own 25 percent of Ctrip, and the companies will combine products and services, according to a statement released Monday. Ctrip will have a 45 percent voting interest in Qunar. The exchange ratio represents a 36 percent premium to Qunar’s closing price on Friday, valuing the company at $7 billion.

“You’re seeing the bigger players getting bigger,” Brendan Ahern, managing director at Krane Fund Advisors LLC in New York who invests in Chinese Internet companies, said by phone on Monday. “There seems to be more and more impetus for the boutique and niche players to be affiliated with one of the big companies, Baidu, Alibaba and Tencent. You would have thought maybe Alibaba would have made a play for Ctrip, since Baidu had Qunar. So maybe it was, the best defense is a good offense.”

Exhibit 6

Travel Boom

The deal comes about five months after Qunar rejected a buyout offer from Ctrip.com amid fierce competition for online bookings in China, where an expanding middle class is jetting abroad. The country is the largest source of tourists in the world as Chinese travelers made 100 million outbound trips in 2014, according to iResearch, which cited data from the National Tourism Administration.

China's online travel market will more than triple to $200 billion by 2020, Goldman Sachs analysts led by David Jin wrote in a note Monday. While the number of Chinese who book trips online keeps growing, tougher pricing competition has hurt profit margins for the biggest online travel agencies.

Ctrip's adjusted operating margin shrank to a record low of 4.8 percent in 2014, falling every year since 2010. Qunar's adjusted operating margin has been negative for at least the past six quarters, data compiled by Bloomberg show.

Internet Deals

China's three largest Internet companies are all seeking to capture more leisure travelers. Alibaba Group Holding Ltd. is expanding its Alitrip unit, and Tencent Holdings Ltd. offered to buy out the 85 percent of Elong Inc. it doesn't already own as they compete with Baidu.

The deal "demonstrates Baidu's continuing commitment to online travel, an industry with tremendous potential ahead," Baidu Chairman Robin Li said in the statement.

The acquisition would add to the $62.5 billion of Internet deals involving Chinese companies during the past year, data compiled by Bloomberg show.

Qunar is the leading seller of airline tickets with 32 percent of the market last year, while Ctrip had about 39 percent of hotel bookings, according to iResearch.

"If you look at the travel market, it's such an obvious way to drive synergy through consolidation," said Chi Tsang, an analyst at HSBC Holdings Plc. "The key issue the two have always needed to figure out was always about valuation and management integration."

Comcast is reportedly in talks to acquire DreamWorks Animation for $3 billion, The Wall Street Journal reported, citing sources familiar with the matter.

DreamWorks is the animated film house behind blockbuster movies like "Kung-Fu Panda" and "Shrek," and headed by CEO Jeffrey Katzenberg.

The Journal notes that DreamWorks Animation's market value currently sits at $2.3 billion, making the projected $3 billion deal a potential boon for DreamWorks.

The film studio, Universal Pictures, also sits under Comcast's umbrella. Universal has its own animated film branch in Illumination Entertainment.

It's not clear whether Katzenberg will stay with the company should the deal go through.

Katzenberg's compensation more than doubled last year to about $13.5 million, The Hollywood Reporter's Paul Bond said last week. $2.5 million of that was salary, the rest was a mix of DreamWorks stock awards and money
